Junghen Family Name History

[Source: The Historical Research Center®, Inc.]

The German family name Junghen is classified as being of nickname origin. Surnames which are derived from a nickname are said to constitute one of the widest and most varied class of family names. This particular category encompasses many different types of origin. The most obvious are those names which are based on a physical characteristic or personal attribute of the initial bearer. In this particular instance, the surname Junghen is derived from "jung", meaning "young" and "Hen", a pet form of the first name Johannes, a derivative of the Hebrew "yehohanan", meaning "God is gracious". Thus, this name literally means "young Hen" and this name would indicate the younger of two with the same first name. In the Middle Ages, Johannes and its numerous pet forms was one of the most popular given names and not only father and son, but also two brothers, would have born the same name. Variants of the surname Junghen include Junghenne, Junghan(ne), Junghans and Jungen.

One of the earliest references to his name or to a variant is a record of one der Junghe Hans, a butcher, who is listed in documents from Hannover in 1410. Catharine Junghen and Johann Michael Hell were married in Teningen, Freiburg, in 1714 and the wedding of Christiana Luisa Junghen and Gustav Christian Baumann took place in Wolfstein, Pfalz, on June 14, 1767. This name was introduced to America as early as 1737 in which year we find a record of the emigration of Johann Jeremias Junghen¹, who sailed to Pennsylvania. The name could of course have been first introduced to that country at an earlier date. The blazon of arms described below was granted to a family by the name Junghen from Lubeck and it is based on a seal belonging to one Stephan Junghen, who is mentioned in documents from 1411.

Blazon of Arms: Paly of six per fess counterchanged sable and argent

Translation: Sable (black) represents the planet Saturn and denotes Constancy.

Crest: a vol alternating sable and argent

Origin: Germany

¹ This name, Johann Jeremias Junghen, was translated from a ship's passenger list. The translation was later corrected and republished to read 'Johann Herman Junghen'. — DYL

Martha (Pringey) Younkin
(1806-1898)

Wife of Dr. Jonas Younkin

Photograph contributed by Robert L. Younkin of Fountain Valley, CA.

Martha is buried in the Beatrice Cemetery in Beatrice, NE, where several of her children settled.

Martha was the daughter of John and Abigail (Rhoades) Pringey. John and Abigail were settlers in the Turkeyfoot area of Somerset County, PA, and are buried in the Jersey Church Cemetery near Ursina. Martha was not the only child of John and Abigail to marry into the Younkin family. Her brother Joseph married Margaret "Peggy" Younkin. And several more generations of descendants also married into our Younkin family. We are still working at a compilation of the descendants of both families.

Ankylosing Spondilitis Is this a hereditary disease?

Roger Yonkin is attempting to discover the rate of incidence in the Junghen family, of the arthritis type known as Ankylosing Spondilitis (also known as, Marie Strumples Disease). If you have any knowledge of a family member who has this arthritis, (onset mostly in males ages 12-14), or know of stories, etc. that indicate an ancestor may have had problems with spine and hips, please contact Roger Yonkin at 26 German Cross Road, Ithaca NY 14850, or ryonkin@lightlink.com.

Meet Your Cousin

Ellouise Theo (Younkin) Kreger
of Somerset, PA

BORN: November 14, 1921 in Black Twp, Somerset Co, PA.

FAMILY: I was a World War II bride. On June 10, 1944, I married James Kreger. We were married in a little country church in Accident, Maryland. We have two children, Nancy Jo, married to Craig Brown. They have two children, Amber Ellen and Amy Lee. They reside in Ladron, SC. Our son, Thomas married Valerie Mosteller. They reside in Somerset, PA. I was an only child and I really miss having sisters and brothers.

WORK/CAREER: I was a homemaker and also a career person. I was employed by Dept. of Transportation, Rockwood Insurance Co, Somerset County Courthouse and am presently working at Georgian Place (a large shopping mall in Somerset). I am working in the Visitor Center and I enjoy meeting people from many states in the U.S.A. and from other nations also.

HOBBIES: reading, shopping, traveling, and just love meeting people and doing what I do best - making conversation.

MUSIC: I enjoy the music from the big band era and gospel music.

FOOD: Since I am Dutch-German descent, I like good Dutch Cooking and some Italian foods.

FAVORITE SAYING: Make the most of each day and live one day at a time.

GOALS: Enjoy the years ahead of me and, if it be God's will, live to be 100.

INTERESTINGLY: I disliked mathematics in school but

worked in accounting and with figures most of my life.

FAVORITE ANCESTOR: I can't think of any one person. I enjoyed my aunts, uncles and all of my kissing cousins.

Items From The Past

The following article appeared in The Washington Democrat, February 19, 1896. [Published in Washington, IA]:

We see by the report of the superintendent of public instruction that since August 1, 1894, four Washington County persons have been granted state certificates to teach school. They are Samuel Younkin, Edith Roberts, Adelaide Twinam, and J. W. Young.

Some Things Never Change

The Ongoing and Sometimes Fractious Saga of the Younkins and Minerds

By Mark A. Miner

John Minerd was hopping mad. A sheep was missing, and he knew who took it. Or so he thought.

Minerd, a Somerset County farmer, was so sure of the crook's identity that he began telling people. (Whether or not it was Minerd's sheep, the record is silent.) And at whom did he point his verbal finger? None other than his very own cousin, John Younkin.

"He stole a sheep," Minerd thundered about Younkin to a group of friends and neighbors, "and I will prove it."

To make his point, Minerd spoke his words not in English but in the tongue that perhaps he knew best — German. Someone listening to Minerd would have actually heard "Er hat ein shoaff gestohlen und ich wol es gut machen."

But Minerd's diatribe wasn't over. Shifting to English, he then amplified his point, saying "He stole a sheep, and I will say so before his face and behind his back as often as he wants to hear it."

And then, perhaps to make sure his message was unequivocally clear, or possibly in reply to someone else's comment, Minerd said, now back in German, "Er beisteindieb." Those in hearing distance knew German and well understood what he meant: "He is a thief."

Serious words.

The year was 1828. Minerd was a headstrong 25-year-old, married to Sarah Ansell, with an infant son. He more or less had his own turf — a portion of a 318-acre Turkeyfoot Township farm that he and his father were renting (and would later buy) from absentee owners in Philadelphia. And he was fluently bilingual.

It's intriguing that Minerd spoke part of his anger in German, because his ancestors had been in America for many generations. In The Planting of Civilization in Western Pennsylvania, the definitive account of 18th and early 19th century life in the region, authors Solon J. and Elizabeth Hawthorn Buck write: "The Germans who pushed west [beyond the Allegheny Mountains] often lost contact with the central body [of Germans east of the Susquehanna River] and more or less rapidly conformed to the life of their neighbors, the English and the Scotch-Irish."

Not so with the ethnic farming communities of Somerset County. They preserved their German culture and heritage by continuing to cook German dishes such as schnitz and knepp, * speak the language of the old country, and marry their neighbors, who often were also their cousins. At least five 19th century weddings are known between the Younkins and Minerds.

On his mother's side, Minerd was in the fifth American generation — grandson of John and Catherine Younkin; great grandson of pioneers John and Catharine Younkin; and great-great-grandson of German immigrants Johann Heinrich Junghen and Catharina Scherer. On his father's side, Minerd was a fourth-generation American, the son of Jacob Minerd Jr. and Catherine Younkin; grandson of Jacob Minerd Sr. and Maria Neün, pioneer settlers of the region; and great-grandson of German immigrants Friedrich Meinert and Eva Maria Weber.

The exact identity of the alleged thief is not clear. The documents simply call him "John Younkin of Jacob." He might have been John J. Younkin, age 50, son of Jacob Younkin and Hannah Nicola. Or he might have been John M. Younkin, age 28, son of Jacob and Eleanor Younkin, and, interestingly, Minerd's future brother in law. Either way, "John Younkin of Jacob" also was a Turkeyfoot Township farmer and, like his accuser, a descendant of German immigrant Johann Heinrich Junghen.

Back to the story. Minerd's German and English words had impact, but got him into trouble. Enough people apparently believed him that they began to shun Younkin. It soon became obvious to Younkin that "divers of [my] neighbours and others ... have withdrawn themselves from [my] company, society and fellowship...." As a "good, true, faithful and honest citizen", Younkin felt he had been "grievously hurt and injured".

So Younkin reacted as any red-blooded American would in the situation. He turned the tables on Minerd. He hired a lawyer and sued his cousin. And Younkin didn't want an apology. He demanded cash. To the tune of $500. A huge sum at the time, reflecting his outrage.

In the slander suit, filed in the Court of Common Pleas of Somerset County, Younkin's attorney Charles Ogle wrote a lengthy and perhaps slightly exaggerated complaint, as lawyers were known to do. Ogle claimed that Minerd uttered his German and English words "contriving and wickedly and maliciously intending not only to deprive [Younkin] ... of his good name, fame, reputation and character ... but also to bring him ... into danger of incurring the pains and penalties of the law enacted against those who are guilty of such offences."

Instead of Younkin facing trial for suspected theft, Minerd was now on the defensive.

The case took two years to resolve. What was said at the trial, and who the witnesses were, and how Minerd defended himself are all lost to history. Court documents only reveal that Minerd was found guilty. But instead of having to fork over the enormous sum that Younkin wanted, Minerd instead paid just a small fraction of the amount.

In a signed statement dated April 6, 1830, Minerd wrote: "I hereby confes judgment in the above suit for ten dollars damages with costs of suit."

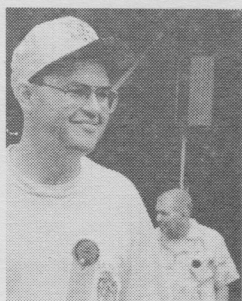

Whether or not Younkin actually stole the sheep is unknown. Whether or not Younkin and Minerd ever restored their relationship also is not known.

What is clear, however, is that as neighbors in the cluster of German settlers in rural Somerset County in the 1820s, and notwithstanding the many intermarriages between the Younkins and Minerds, some families weren't always the best of friends.

Sad to say, some things never change.

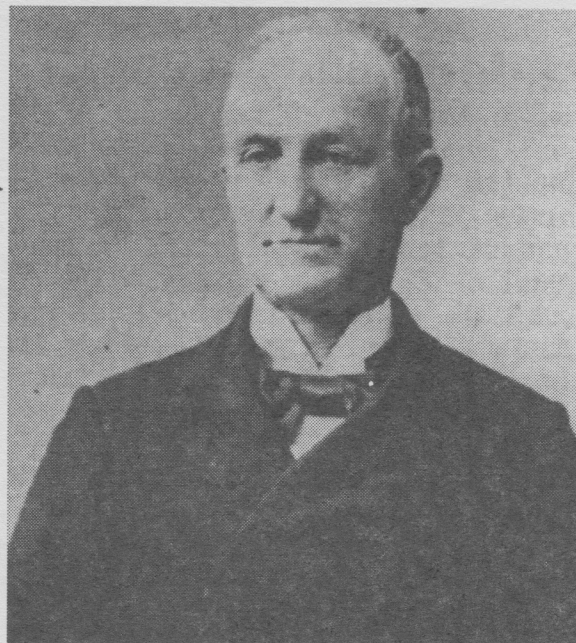

* A popular treat of cured ham, dried sweet apples, dumplings and milk still enjoyed today by Younkin-Minerd descendants in the Kingwood area.

 The German language was passed down further to at least one more generation of the family. John Minerd's son Henry A. Miner (a Kingwood-area and later Connellsville resident who lived until 1912), nephew Ephraim Miner (a lifelong Kingwood farmer who died in 1921) and niece Martha Gorsuch (of Mill Run, Rockwood and Somerset who lived until 1960) are known to have spoken German at times. Several fascinating questions remain. Do the German words used by Minerd in 1828 contain any dialect consistent with the Hesse region of Germany from whence the Junghens originated? Might the dialect help pinpoint the specific geographic area in Germany from where the Meinerts/Minerds came, a fact unknown at present? Stay tuned.
